My opinion is to never take these things lightly. Prayer, rituals, meditation and divination all are very powerful actions, and I think we take for granted sometimes the power their repercussions and results can have. I remember being a teenager playing with a Ouija board and having "freaky things" happen the more I played with it. I viewed it as a toy to communicate with dead rock stars, and when the "freaky things" would happen, it was to the delight of my friends and me. The thing is though, talking boards aren't toys. If you want to act as though they are, the risk is yours to take. I spent a few years on the fence about getting one, until I finally decided I was mentally and emotionally ready to handle it. I decided to get Psychic Circle. I was intrigued by the subjects covered on the board itself, and also by its mandala shape. For my first session I centered and grounded myself through meditation. I recited the prayers that came in the pamphlet and began the session. The dial moved with ease and the session was positive, giving me answers to questions that had been troubling me. When I wanted to close the session (by saying "Goodbye"), the dial kept moving between "No" and "Open." It did it three times, and no matter how much I asked it to close the session it would not end it. So finally I asked if the spirit had anything it wanted to tell me. The message it gave was, "Yes. You listen, have faith that you are protected and guided, and that you are acting in harmony with your highest good. You are loved in the spirit realm." It moved me profoundly. Although I hadn't consciously been aware of this, once this message was communicated, I realized how much for the past year I've been second guessing my actions.
